Read the below passage and answer the questions that follows:

It has often been said that values cannot be taught, they must be caught. The need of the hour is to strengthen the moral and cultural fabric of the individual, society and the nation. It is the parents, teachers, elders and leaders in society who act as role models for the younger generation.

Their behaviour, action and non-verbal communication often sets a trend and acts as a catalyst for students. Schools need to implement the value education programme through activities and projects. Universal values such as love, peace, tolerance, brotherhood and co-operation should be reinforced through various literary projects. An effort should be made to celebrate all the festivals of all faiths. By doing this, students are sensitised to the dominant strengths of all religions. Human rights must be respected and protected. Gender sensitivity must be inculcated from an early age, so that students grow up with respect for the opposite sex. Schools can use various platforms such as morning assemblies, seminars, inter-house and inter-school competitions to promote activities that foster the values of compassion, kindness, helpfulness and fraternity.

Read the below passage and answer the questions that follow:

A large percentage of our population lives in villages and even now agriculture is their source of livelihood. However, many of them have migrated to towns, cities and other urban areas in the hope of getting better jobs and income. This polarised urbanisation has not helped to develop our nation. This is primarily because the uneducated, illiterate and unskilled labour that comes to the city finds its hope dashed to the ground. Most live in slums in unhygienic and petty conditions which are a source of disease and ill-health. Over-population is a menace that is responsible for a large number of problems. The Government needs to take a number of steps to curb this. It is possible to prevent people from producing a large number of children only if they are aware of the pitfalls of a large family. Research has shown that people who live in slums fall under this category.
