Comprehension:

Read the following passage and answer the question by selecting the most suitable option.

The water culture of people is an important indicator of their level of civilisation. Take the two ancient cities, Rome and the town of Edo, which grew into the mega-metropolis of Tokyo. The people of Rome brought their drinking water with the help of long aqueducts, which are today regarded as architectural marvels of the bygone Roman civilisation. But the people of Rome lived on the banks of the river Tiber. They did not need to bring water from afar.

Unfortunately, they did not know how to dispose their human wastes, and like the modern Western civilisation, they ended up polluting the river, thus being forced to go far in search of clean water. This makes Roman aqueducts not a symbol of intelligence, but one of great environmental stupidity.

On the other hand, Edo, which too was situated on several streams, ensured that all its human wastes were collected and returned to the farmlands. Its neighbouring rivers remained clean and it tapped its water from them through an extensive e piped water supply.

But today we are all children of Rome, and not Edo. We have turned our backs on our waterbodies, and if we don't have money to clean our mess, then we will have nothing but polluted waters.

Worse, the political economy of defecation is such that no democratic government will accept the hard fact that it cannot "afford" to invest in modern sewage systems for its citizens. Instead, it continues to subsidize the users of these systems, in the name of poor, who cannot afford these system in the first place. The cost to build toilets is externalized through these environmental programmes. The logical policy would be to accept the cost and then to impose differential pricing so that while the rich pay for the cost of the capital and resource intensive sewage and the waste disposal technology, the poor pay for the cost of their disposal system, which is invariably unconnected to the sewerage system and hence low cost.

SubQuestion No : 1

Q.1 What is differential pricing for water?

Ans

- 1. The rich pay for costly sewages and poor pay for the delivery systems in water management.
- 2. The rich pay more for water they consumed and the poor pay less or nothing for the water.
- 3. Both the rich and the poor pay less for the water they consumed as the state has the responsibility.
- 4. Poor cannot afford to pay for the water as they always get less water than required.

Comprehension:

Read the following passage and answer the question by selecting the most suitable option.

The central theme of Gitanjali, Tagore's finest achievement in English verse, is devotion and its motto is, "I am here to sing the songs." These songs, firmly rooted in the ancient tradition of Indian saint poetry, yet reveal a highly personal quest for the Divine, characterized by a great variety of moods and approaches. In his heart, the poet has 'cut a path where fall Thy feet.' Tagore sees God as 'unbroken perfection', as a giver of 'simple great gifts', 'infinite gifts' which 'come to me only on these very small hands of mine. Ages pass and still thou poorest and still there is room to fill.' But on occasion, He is also the 'King of the fearful night', armed with the 'mighty sword, flashing as a flames, heavy as a bolt of thunder.' He is everywhere, the light of his music 'illuminates the world', 'every moment and every age, every day and every night, he comes, comes, every comes.' He is not to be found in temple; 'he is there where the tiller is tilling the hard ground and where the pathmaker is breaking stones.' Hence, deliverance is not for the poet in renunciation; for one need not give up this world, itself a beautiful creation of God, in order to reach Him. Hence again, morality is not tragedy, for Death is only God's servant and messenger, and when he arrives, the poet can say, 'when I go from here let this be my parting word, that what I have seen is unsurpassable' (Lines which were reportedly quoted by Wilfred Owen to his mother upon going to the War) The poet adds, 'In this playhouse of infinite forms I have had my play and here have I caught sight of Him that is formless.' But Tagore's pilgrimage is not entirely a comfortable pilgrimage of joy. There are moments of despair and frustration too, in it. At one place, the poet laments, 'He came and sat by my side but I work not. What a cursed sleep it was, O miserable me!... Alas, why are my night all thus lost?' He also ruefully realizes that he is a prisoner, who forged his own chain 'very carefully'; and at another place he watches helplessly as 'they break into my sacred shrine, strong and turbulent, and snatch with unholy greed the offering from god's altar.' Pitifully, he prays to God to 'strike, strike at the root of penury in my heart.' Tagore's final city however, is " 'Like a flock of homesick cranes flying night and day back to their mountain nests let all my life take its voyage to its eternal home in one salutation to thee.'

SubQuestion No : 6

Q.6 'deliverance is not for the poet in renunciation' means

- Ans
- 1. Renunciation alone is not liberation of the person.
  - 2. Liberation and renunciation do not go together.
  - 3. Liberation of the person is in being free.
  - 4. Liberation of the person is in renouncing the worldly pleasures.

Hence, deliverance is not for the poet in renunciation; for one need not give up this world, itself a beautiful creation of God, in order to reach Him. Hence again, morality is not tragedy, for Death is only God's servant and messenger, and when he arrives, the poet can say, 'when I go from here let this be my parting word, that what I have seen is unsurpassable' (Lines which were reportedly quoted by Wilfred Owen to his mother upon going to the War) The poet adds, 'In this playhouse of infinite forms I have had my play and here have I caught sight of Him that is formless.' But Tagore's pilgrimage is not entirely a comfortable pilgrimage of joy. There are moments of despair and frustration too, in it. At one place, the poet laments, 'He came and sat by my side but I work not. What a cursed sleep it was, O miserable me!... Alas, why are my night all thus lost?' He also ruefully realizes that he is a prisoner, who forged his own chain 'very carefully'; and at another place he watches helplessly as 'they break into my sacred shrine, strong and turbulent, and snatch with unholy greed the offering from god's altar.' Pitifully, he prays to God to 'strike, strike at the root of penury in my heart.' Tagore's final city however, is" 'Like a flock of homesick cranes flying night and day back to their mountain nests let all my life take its voyage to its eternal home in one salutation to thee.'

Comprehension:

Read the following passage and answer the question by selecting the most suitable option.

The central theme of Gitanjali, Tagore's finest achievement in English verse, is devotion and its motto is, "I am here to sing the songs.' These songs, firmly rooted in the ancient tradition of Indian saint poetry, yet reveal a highly personal quest for the Divine, characterized by a great variety of moods and approaches. In his heart, the poet has 'cut a path where fall Thy feet.' Tagore sees God as 'unbroken perfection', as a giver of 'simple great gifts', 'infinite gifts' which 'come to me only on these very small hands of mine. Ages pass and still thou poorest and still there is room to fill.' But on occasion, He is also the 'King of the fearful night', armed with the 'mighty sword, flashing as a flames, heavy as a bolt of thunder.'

He is everywhere, the light of his music 'illuminates the world'

He is everywhere, the light of his music illumines the world, 'every moment and every age, every day and every night, he comes, comes, every comes.' He is not to be found in temple; 'he is there where the tiller is tilling the hard ground and where the pathmaker is breaking stones.' Hence, deliverance is not for the poet in renunciation; for one need not give up this world, itself a beautiful creation of God, in order to reach Him. Hence again, morality is not tragedy, for Death is only God's servant and messenger, and when he arrives, the poet can say, 'when I go from here let this be my parting word, that what I have seen is unsurpassable' (Lines which were reportedly quoted by Wilfred Owen to his mother upon going to the War) The poet adds, 'In this playhouse of infinite forms I have had my play and here have I caught sight of Him that is formless.' Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

The Kalinga campaign was clearly brutal, with 1,50,000 deported, a direct death toll of 1,00,000 and even larger numbers dead from wounds and famine. India's population at this stage would have been around 65 million and casualties on such a scale would have been devastating for a small province like Kalinga. Excavations at Kalinga's capital of Tosali reveal structures that still bears marks of a devastating assault. The large number of arrowheads found embedded in a small section of the ramparts tell of a blizzard of arrows. Ashoka appears to have regretted his decision because of the suffering it caused – very unusual for any era and the stark contrast to the brutal rules of the First Emperor of China at about the same time. Nonetheless, one should always take statements made by politicians with a pinch of salt. The edicts are, after all, what Ashoka wanted us to remember for him. Notice that Ashoka expresses regret but does not offer to free Kalinga and its inhabitants.

Although the inscriptions are very interesting, I think historians have focused too much attention on the noble sentiments expressed in them and not enough on the overall impact of the pillars. Around 40-50 feet high, the stone columns are impressive structures often capped by a lion (or lions), an animal that was associated with the Mauryas since Chandragupta's time. In some of the pillars, the lions are accompanied with the 'chakra' or wheel. Historians often associate this with the Buddhist 'dharma-chakra' but, in my view, they could just as well be interpreted to symbolize the 'Chakravartin' or Universal Monarch. The pillar and the lions are clear expression of imperial power. They were the Mauryan way of marking territory.
